

thing that had the power of sustaining life. My shoes were worn through and my clothes torn into shreds. It was cold during the nights and damp during the days. I could stand it no longer, and concluded I might as well die with the rest of the people that had been captured as to starve to death in the mountains alone. I heard the cannon firing and thought martial law was over."

When told that martial law was not suspended, Lane expressed a good deal of surprise. He had forgotten the anniversary of the Government.

"When you started into this thing, what did you and the others with you intend doing?"

"God only knows. We were simply fighting in the dark with nothing toward which to strive. We were fighting for 'something,' and that is all."

"You know, of course, that Wilcox, your leader, had been arrested?"

"I heard that he has been arrested; but when you speak of him as leader, you perhaps think he was the prime mover in the revolution. You will be surprised when I tell you that Nowlin was the head man. He did the planning and getting ready. Wilcox was invited by Nowlin, and Wilcox in turn invited the rest."

"Were you one of the leaders in the rebellion?"

"No, I was simply 'in with' the rest of the boys."

"Do you know the consequences of your action against the Government?"

"Yes, I do, and I am sorry I ever went into the thing. There was no reason in it, but I could not stand by and see my own people fight. I am ready to make a clean breast of the whole matter. There is no use in sticking it out any longer. I think, however, that the natives will all take the oath of allegiance now. They should all join hands and help the Government along."

Further conversation with Lane was interrupted on the appearance of special policeman Montana, who escorted the prisoner to police headquarters.

Lane seemed to be in the best of spirits. He talked freely, and expressed his opinions as if under no restraint. He was barefooted and wore a suit of clothes that was loaned him by Long. He wore a white straw hat with a peacock lei band, and in his mouth he carried an old pipe, which he smoked vigorously between words while en route to town.

MR. BECKLEY'S STATEMENT.

Tells How He Came and Went on Sunday, January 6th.

Mr. G. Beckley, purser of the Kinau, against whom reports have been circulated, to the effect that he was connected with the royalists in the recent uprising, saw the Government officials yesterday and denied in toto the charges brought against him.

Mr. Beckley states that on Sunday—the day of the uprising—he left his house at 10:30 a.m. with his wife and children and went to Kamohili, where he has a ranch. He talked there with two Chinamen about the water rights, remaining about an hour. He then drove through the park to his place, Aqua Marine, which is the next adjoining Bertelmann's. The house was thrown open and Mrs. Beckley was occupied in setting things to right and preparing a luncheon. Mr. Beckley, while sitting at lunch, saw a small boat propelled by one man going toward the other side of Diamond Head. It appeared that there were provisions in the boat. Mr. Beckley remarked: "They must be short of provisions," referring to the luau which was being held at Charlie Dwight's. After lunch Mr. Beckley with his children took a stroll on the beach. He saw two ladies enter the lookout station and men on the beach and around the hills, but did not talk with any of them.

"On the way back he saw a hackman on the fence that separates his place from Bertelmann's. The man was looking toward Diamond Head. Mr. Beckley went toward the man, recognized him as John Radin, and asked him what he was doing there. His answer was that he came 'from Sans Souci with Cupid.' Mr. Beckley called his attention to the bathing place and coconut grove. While remarking on these things the hackman was called to Bertelmann's house and Mr. Beckley went into his own home. While there he saw some boys in his yard picking algaroba beans, and noticed some horses tied outside the fence. He laid down for a rest for about an hour and from where he lay noticed considerable passing on the street.

About 5:30, as Mr. and Mrs. Beckley were preparing to come home, a native boy came up with a rush and asked where Bertelmann's house was. Mr. Beckley directed him to the place, but had no further talk with him. At this juncture his carriage arrived and he, with his family, drove through Campbell's Lane, where he met Deputy-Marshal Brown on horseback. No words were exchanged. Mr. Beckley's party drove directly to their home on King street. They retired early and the first Mr. Beckley knew of the trouble was while at breakfast on board the Kinau Monday morning at 7 o'clock.

Some time ago Mr. Simon Goldbaum of San Luis Rey, Cal., was troubled with a lame back and rheumatism. He used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and a prompt cure was effected. He says he has since advised many of his friends to try it and all who have done so have spoken highly of it. It is for sale by all dealers. BENSON, SMITH & CO., Agents for H. I.
